

Melissa Corban knows firsthand the difficulties of asking for help. While smiling she said, “It’s hard to admit when you can’t feed your own family.” She is beyond happy she found the food pantry at Wynndale Baptist Church, saying, “They are so friendly. It is like a family, and that makes it easier.” Melissa and her family haven’t always needed help. She and her husband were making ends meet for their family of nine until nine months ago when Melissa lost her job as a receptionist. Melissa’s unexpected job loss, combined with her husband’s health issues, led them to seek out a place like Wynndale. While she does visit monthly, Melissa is actively searching for a job; she does not plan to always need help. She looks forward to getting her family back on their feet so they can give back the generosity they have been shown.
